Q2 → Describe the various steps involved in the process approach to writing?

Ans → The process approach to writing is a method that involves several steps to help writers develop and organize their ideas effectively.

Pre-writing! This is the initial stage of the writing process, where writers gather and organize their ideas. This stage can involve brainstorming, freewriting, clustering, or outlining.

Drafting! This is the stage where writers begin to put their ideas into written form. They may not worry about grammar.

Revising! After the initial draft is complete, writers go back and review their work to make changes and improvements. They may add, delete, or reorganize information to make their writing more effective.

Q1 → How are new words formed through Affixation and Compounding? Give examples of both?

Ans 1 → New words can be formed in a variety of ways, but two common methods are affixation and compounding.

Affixation → is the process of adding prefixes and suffixes to existing words to create new words. Prefixes are added to the beginning of a word, while suffixes are added to the end. Prefixes can indicate negation, such as "un" in "unhappy". Or can indicate a change of meaning, such as "dis" in "dislike".

Compounding is the process of combining two or more words to create a new word. This can be done by simply joining the words together, such as "toothbrush", or by using a hyphen to connect the words, such as "book-shelf".

One important thing to note is that affixation can be both derivational and inflection.
